Umbria's Countryside and Cities

8 nights, land only for 2 persons

One of Italy's smallest regions of Italy, UMBRIA has been long dismissed as Tuscany's "gentler sister", however it has recently emerged from the shadow of its more famous western neighbor. It is more authentic and certainly less touristy and unlike Tuscany, not crowded. The many Umbrian hills and mountains cast long dark shadows over river valleys; which are already darkened by lush chestnut groves and elm forests. This landlocked region's overwhelmingly medieval character harkens one back to the mysticism and mysteries of the Dark Ages. In so many ways, Umbria has lain in the shadows for centuries. The very identity of its original inhabitants, the Umbrians, is so clouded that we still have no clear understanding of the meaning of their name.

Perhaps self-imposed modesty is an inborn trait here. That would explain the relative obscurity of this beautiful region, a land whose rolling hills are dotted with castles, fortresses and watchtowers and also due to this reason called “THE GREEN HEART OF ITALY”, whose well-preserved hill towns produce world-renowned handmade ceramics, exquisite wines and extra virgin olive oil, whose many monasteries were founded by a host of local saints, whose valleys are laced with countless gleaming rivers and host Italy's largest lake.

In Umbria, halfway up the slopes of Monte Fumaiolo, a trickle seeps out of the ground and wanders southward, gaining breadth and notoriety to become Rome's mighty Tiber. Any traveler who goes from Florence to Rome by land passes through the Tiber Valley, whose Umbrian locales include such towns as Perugia, Assisi, Spoleto and Orvieto.

The cuisine of Umbria is varied and tasty. Best known perhaps for truffles and excellent olive oil, pork is also used extensively in hams, sausage and salami as well as porchetta (suckling pig). Fish, fresh from Lake Trasimeno can be found in the towns surrounding the lake and Perugia is renowned for its chocolate (Try the Baci Perugina dark chocolate with hazelnuts inside!!!!). Wine from Orvieto, Montefalco and Torgiano is not expensive and of a high quality.
